14 Hens Lay 13 Eggs! A Day. Some Record

Mr. Moore Gets Lots of Eggs. Good Hatching Eggs, Too.

"I had been getting 2 or 3 eggs a day (in 14 hens). Then I commenced putting Don Sung in the feed, and am getting 11 to 13 eggs a day, and on one setting. Don Sung is the best thing ever found for making hens lay."

E. L. Moore, 812 Clayborn St., Danville, Va.

Mr. Moore started getting these extra eggs in February and wrote this letter last March. "I can get this product with eggs setting at around 70 cents a dozen, and this is no better than Don Sung is doing for many or how few eggs you are getting. Don Sung will pay you. Accept our offer just as it is. Give your hens Don Sung and watch results for one month. If you don't find that Don Sung is for itself and pays for a good profit besides, simply tell us and your money will be refunded. Don Sung (Chicago) for (see laying) would directly in the egg-laying organs, and is also a splendid tonic. It is easily given in the feed, improves the health of the mother, makes her stronger, and more active in any weather, and starts her laying."

Don't get you the eggs, no matter how cold or wet the weather. Your money will be refunded by return mail. Get Don Sung from your druggist or poultry supply dealer or send 50 cents for a package by mail prepaid. Bureau-Don Sung Co., 240 Columbia Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

The county agent organization in Alabama is complete and great work is being accomplished, they said.

Railroad News

Business on the Chicago and North-western road has again taken a slump, the second time this year.

Day Ticket Agent David Cunningham, St. Paul passenger station, has been asked several times to organize a bowling team. Dave is hitting the pins rather hard this season, and should be able to get a good team together.

Conductor John Jarvi is busy these cold evenings running a dog run in place of Conductor John McGee, who is spending a few days' vacation about the city.

Rate Clerk John Brown of the St. Paul is busy both night and day. When John is not lugging through the tariffs looking for a rate to Nome, Alaska, he is busy pounding the drums at some dance.

Day Yardmaster D. P. Davey has returned to work after taking a short vacation. Mr. Davey is exceedingly busy these days, despite the fact that business is rather poor.

Several reports are current throughout railroad circles that a popular young brakeman of the Mineral Point division, near Rockford, Ill., had the other day and got married. No names will be mentioned as yet as he refuses to admit to the truth.

Richard Barry has taken the position of flagman on trains 22 and 5. Richard claims he is well satisfied with his new position.

No Smoking Campaign Will Be Waged at "Y"

Although it has always been the policy of the Y. M. C. A. to discourage smoking, the association does not desire to be arbitrary in the matter, due to the fact that there are many returning soldiers who are accustomed to the habit. A circular from the international committee received this morning by A. S. Phelps, boys' secretary, advises a campaign of education rather than "No Smoking" signs displayed in buildings.

Father Of Janesville Man Tells Of Abuses Practiced By Huns On British Prisoners

(BY GEORGE KALVELAGE)

Unbelievable tales of sorrow and suffering are related by British colonial soldiers lately released from the prison camps of Germany. In letters to his son, J. R. Jensen of this city, N. P. Jensen of Bjerringbro, Denmark, tells of his visits to various Danish camps where these released prisoners spend several weeks recuperating from the effects of overwork and under-nourishment, prior to sailing for their homes in India and other English possessions.

Although they are but wrecks of their former selves, these men are now happy in the thought that they are soon to return to their loved ones. The royal treatment accorded them by the sympathetic Danes and the eating of bread, cake, milk and sugar, sent over for their use by England, combine to make them gaily strengthen rapidly. The skeleton-like bodies soon resume the appearance of healthy human beings, the color returns to their sunken, pallid cheeks and they are happy once released captives tell of working 13 to 16 hours a day, building trenches and roads, many times under the shell fire of the allies. Each man was allotted a certain piece of work to perform each day and was forced to keep at it until it was done. Fixed working hours were from 5 o'clock in the morning until 7 o'clock at night, but many times they were required to labor until 9 and 11 o'clock in the evening.

Surrounded by German guards, escape was impossible, the men being driven to their work under points of bayonets.

Each man was allowed but three pounds of bread per week, which with a few turnips and water formed his ration. Hungry to the point of starvation, hundreds of them died like flies.

Denmark, one of the few countries which remained neutral during the war, is grateful to the United States for sending men over to down the Germans, writes Mr. Jensen. The little country for years has lived in fear of the big black cloud of Prussianism and now that it has been done away with, the Danes are thankful. Although the government was technically neutral during the war, sympathy of the people were strongly pro-ally. The seizure of the two Danish provinces, Schleswig and Holstein by the Prussians in 1864 stirred up a strong anti-German feeling among the Danes and it has not been forgotten.

Mr. Jensen spent some time in this country. At the outbreak of war in 1914 he was visiting his sons in Janesville and was detained in the country for nearly four years being unable to obtain passage to Denmark. Finally in April 1918, he was allowed to return to his native country, where he found the people freely discussing the failure of America to send over enough troops to stop the Huns. Because of the fact that this country had been in the war for a year, the Danes were disappointed and a spirit of dislike had been engendered.

"Just wait a few weeks," advised Mr. Jensen who had visited Camp Grant and other army camps here and there given him a picture of the preparations being made. The flood of U. S. troops to France and their great work there has now entirely changed this feeling to one of thankfulness and was fully aware of the vast military preparations being made. The flood of U. Voice of the People

To the Editor:

Last Saturday the influenza ban was lifted in this city. The churches, schools, shows and pool halls were allowed to open up for public amusement. The official order of the health officer reads: "All places of public amusement will be reopened."

Now why is it that the health officer and other officials do not keep their word and allow the people to have their dances?

Evansville has not very many young people and certain men sit in their office chairs and wonder why the young people become so restless and want to have their dances.

BUILDING FOR THE FUTURE

The housing of the women and men who will come to Janesville to make their homes is the result of increased employment at good wages means something more than just providing places for the new citizens to live.

By proper solution of the problem, Janesville will not only benefit itself as a business center, but it will become a city with an ideal civic government. If the man who is coming here every day is given an encouragement to build their homes, Janesville, instead of being a sort of way station for restless wage earners to stop off and earn a few dollars, will be a city of contented people who have more than a passing interest. By building good homes for those who can buy, we will attract the best class of wage earners. Tie a man to his own home and you have a citizen in Janesville. This has been proven in hundreds of cases where cities have had to confront the housing problem.
Janesville has the opportunity to benefit by the mistakes of other municipalities which suddenly were called upon to awaken to the needs of an increased population.

The men who are back of the Janesville Housing corporation are bending every effort to bring to this city the best class of wage-earners. A comprehensive housing plan has been worked out. The plan is to build homes to better the conditions.
There is nothing selfish in their efforts. It is hoped that every man who comes here to work, as well as those now employed, will have a chance to buy his home. He will be given as much for his money as it is possible to give him. The way for procuring these homes will be made as easy as possible. He will be given all the room necessary for the comfort of his family. This sort of encouragement will bring desirable workers.

The campaign to be waged Wednesday is to raise $100,000 in stock subscriptions to add to the $200,000 already pledged.

It is the civic duty of every person who can afford to take an interest in this concern to push the load over the hill. It is not a request for donations. It is the investment of dollars in a project which will give assurance of making Janesville a "bigger and better" city.

LET US BE OPTIMISTS.

It is necessary for the public to take an optimistic view of the future as regards industrial and economic conditions. We are more or less at a loss to predict the future as we emerge from war. There is an air of uncertainty about what is going to happen. Most of this can be eliminated when one gets right down to a close study of the situation.

We are prosperous, despite the fact that we have had to spend billions for war. The banks are filled with money. Wages are highest in the history of the nation. Manufacturers are ready to go ahead so as to employ those who return from service. Wages may become lower in proportion to the lowering of the costs of necessities. This will not be brought about at once, perhaps, for the manufactured goods on hand must not be sold at a loss.

Those who have the money to buy should spend for what they need.
This will assure work for the man now on the jobs and those returning from war. Business must not be interrupted because people feel uncertain of the future. We are not facing hard times. We are facing good times. We have millions of dollars worth of reconstruction work to do.
We must catch up with the work which was stopped because of the war. We have millions to spend for this work and if everyone will forget the ever-present calamity-howler who can see nothing but dark despair ahead for us, we will readjust ourselves without loss to anyone.

Experts who have made a study of the present situation as affects the industrial world, believe that there will be no nervous disagreement between the employers of labor and the employees during the progress of readjustment. So far there has been no disposition on the part of big employers of labor to curtail wages, compensation for the construction in new business having been provided for in the reduction of overtime. In other industries, employers have been inclined to reduce working time rather than the rate of compensation in the hope that a reawakening demand for their products may enable them shortly to resume operations on a normal scale.

It is argued by one expert "that if congress and the administration will find the means for affording effective sponsorship for a very general movement to reduce the cost of commodities, or at least to release from the leash of war-time regulation, the national forces of supply and demand, we shall find that the problems that confront us will not be difficult of solution."

when it seemed necessary, to stay there.

Everyone is satisfied that we have done our share of hard fighting and liberal money-spending to further a great cause. And we are in a position to reap the benefit of our causes. But what humanitarian cause could we foster by warring with the Russians? They are just now engaged in making a great social experiment. We fear it will bring disaster to them. But as long as the Russians do not attempt to force their doctrines upon us, why right have we to interfere with their experiments?

American and allied troops should leave Russia at once. Let the Russians perfect their own freedom in their own way. Let them work out their own salvation if they can. The Bolsheviks should not be given the opportunity to say they could have succeeded in their plans if the allies had not interfered.

The sooner foreign soldiers leave that clutter the sooner a stable government will be formed.

An appeal is made in a German newspaper for the organization of men and women to prevent the execution of the former Kaiser. The appeal touching upon the delivery of the Bill to the allies, reads: "This would constitute a new and deeply humiliating insult to the honor of Germany. To guard against such a delivery there shall be created a gi-gantic league of German men and women who intend to save the German people from this everlasting disgrace."

If it was not such a serious subject this should bring forth many chuckles.
It certainly does not seem possible that the German people do not know that they and their country have been forever disgraced in the eyes of civilized humanity by the house of Hohenzollern and that any attempt to intercede for the former emperor will serve to brand those interested as enemies of mankind. Those back of such a move had better bend their energies to conducting themselves in a manner which will in time restore Germany in the eyes of the world, as a place in which to live. German as a nation has no honor to defend because she has allowed this man, whom they would protect, and his gang of cutthroats, to prostitute it.

Just because the doctors put her in a hospital bed which should have been occupied by a patient who was going to have an appendix removed, and because three or four other persons normal and healthy organs, a California woman is suing for $25,000.
This indicates that one must be careful not to leave his appendix hanging around.

The Lutherans of the city have started a campaign this week to raise their share of a $500,000 fund, a part of which will be used in reconstruction work in Europe. There are millions of Lutherans in the war swept countries of Europe and the church aims to provide for them. The response will no doubt be generous as the Lutherans have done great work during the war with the funds which have been collected in the past.

There were enough patriotic Americans in Milwaukee to put to rout the plan to revive German theatrical performances. The protests on the part of those who believe that the German language should be spoken only when necessary were so strong that the management of the theater decided to call off the shows which had been announced for Sunday and Wednesday of this week.

Janesville has lost its reputation for hospitality among certain classes of visitors to the city. Hoboes who were accustomed to stop with us in the past have numbered but nine this winter. With the assurance of plenty of work in the future, it is to be expected that this number will not be increased.

A Nellville man has invented a noiseless bowling ball. Someone is forever taking the joy out of life.
There is no sound sweeter to the ear of the maple-splinter than the low rumble of the lignum vitae and the smash as it crashes against the king pin.

One of the measures introduced in the state legislature which will strike the popular fancy is that providing that wearing apparel made of artificial substance be labeled so that the purchaser will know what he is paying his hard cash for. This gives those not expert on materials an even break.

Complete Failure
The Russian style of strike seems to be a complete fiasco in the country.
The lesson learned in Seattle is apt to have a discouraging effect upon similar projects elsewhere.—Wausau

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST.

THE SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

The second lieutenants: I sing their fame.
For out of the baseball fields they came.
To play their part in a stiffer game.
They were smooth of cheek and were keen of eye;
They were boys at school till they heard the cry
Of a national calling for men to die.

Some of them made us smile, perhaps.
At the pride they took in their shoulder straps.
As they larded it over the other chaps.

And we laughed at them in their pompous drill of the raw recruits, Insisting on regular, stiff salutes.

But over there where the hate was red
And the cannons barked and the blood was red,
The second lieutenants the charges led.

I can see them now in the dawn's pale glow Cheering their men in the trench below.
As they wait the hour that is set to go.

As they lead the top and the fight begins
Nobody jeers at them now or grins.
God snags them all their sins.

Nobody sneers at their boyish pride.
Nobody smiles at their manly stride.
The jests are lost in the way they died.

fame.
As boys from the baseball fields they came.
To play their part in a stiffer game.

God grant them glory and peace, I pray.
For the poppies bloom where they sleep today.
The second lieutenants who led the way!

A LITTLE SPICE OF LIFE.

The other day a friend Eased himself into our office.
His necktie was under His left ear and his hat Was at an angle of forty-five.
He placed each foot carefully Before the other when he walked And finally brought up
At our desk with a crash And made fast.
It might be alleged, without Fear of successful contradiction, That the gentleman
Was carrying contraband.
"I'm going to stop."
He said, just before Making the usual touch.
"I'm going to stop drinking."
When I say I'm going to stop, I'm going to stop, I know me.
It sounded interesting.
Though he had said it often before.
"Sure go this time," he said.
"Going to stop forever."
When are you going to quit?
We asked. We always liked him.
"I'm going to stop for good."
He replied firmly.
And we believed him
For the first time
In his life.

Every real genuine American is today lauding the efforts of our secret service and immigration officials who will deport from America, for good, adjudged and aliens. Really it is hard to draw a line between these two types of propagandists and each is equally as dangerous to the welfare of the country as the other.

Nothing will please and satisfy the American people better than continuation of the good work which has just begun. In this connection, it might be added that there is a vast herd yet to be gathered in the net.

"Y. M. C. A. In France Has Done As Well As Army," Says White

By VICTOR McNAUGHT.

Paris, Feb. 17.—(Special Correspondence).—The inquiry of a stranger arriving in France at 6 a. m. is fully aware by noon that the institution most unpopular in the American army is the Y. M. C. A.
Any doughboy will tell him so,
and will take obvious pleasure in the telling.

There is no news in this, to be sure, as everybody knows that one of the greatest of all sports during the past few weeks has been the "exposé" of the Y. No doubt the people back home have heard and read many able defenses
of the organization, and statements of the great amount of work done for the soldiers. My purpose is to set down what I have heard from the side, officers and Y workers on the front, and what I have actually seen, with the intent to state the plain and exact truth.

Why Soldiers Protest.

Why do the soldiers decry the Y.
M. C. A.? We may take the following as the chief reasons advanced for their discontent:

1. The Y failed to bring comforts needed in the trench zone during the big drives, though it has been very active and efficient in rest areas.

2. Y men have had a safe and easy time of it when they ought to have been wearing rifles in the infantry.

3. There are too many excursionists and sight-seers in the Y, who are ready to go home as soon as they tasted of the excitement of life in Paris.

4. Too many preachers in the Y, and too much preaching.

5. The doughboys resent the imposition that the Y has "saved" them from various forms of perdition.
They allow with some heat that a few Y workers needed a bit of shepherding that they didn't get in the front lines.

6. The Y workers are "condescending and supercilious; too many small men with inflated opinions of themselves."

7. The usual complaints about overpricing for canteen supplies, and many protests that the Y. M. C.
A. should give away its wares.

The reader will please remember that the seven cups or so of me by soldiers met in various parts of France, and that they are set down here, not as conclusions, but for further reference and examination.

One Sunday morning a party of newcomers drove into Verdun in a military automobile, enroute from the St. Mihiel region to the Argonne forest. We needed a few more about to eat at midday, as we were about to enter a region swept bare of all civilian life, so we drove to the Y. M. C.
A. headquarters. We found a building, large, bare and partly ruined building opening into a desolate court strewn with stones, bits of broken tile and other debris. The canteen occupied a large room on the ground floor. It was crowded with men and officers, standing in a line that wound back and forth, waiting their turns at the counter. A man and a woman were working at the counter.
I just read the names of the Y.
M. C. A. and that they would remain for many hours more.

"Now, the reason why I like the Salvation Army more than the Y. M.
C. A.," came a voice at my side. I listened. One doughboy was telling another that "the Y acts as though it is doing you a favor, while the Salvation Army folks make you feel that you are doing them a favor in coming to them." I did not personally envy the Y workers their long, hard hours in this muddy, desolate place, where no one seemed inclined to give them any thanks for their effort.

Folling the Women.

The Y. M. C. A. occupies a large building in a convenient central location in Bordeaux, and it seems to be crowded all the time. The canteen workers get little time to reflect about the aspersions of critics, because the critics keep their mouths too busy talking to think of anything else. The place is liberally patronized by the soldiers and sailors, and the lounge is a popular room, especially after the evening.
One Sunday night Rube Goldberg and I dropped in to buy some soap and other home comforts, and we found the place crowded. A sailor was playing on the piano, and he was accompanied by a woman violinist, who performed to evident enjoyment of the boys. Outside, the wild young women of Bordeaux were literally combing the streets for victims, but they were deprived of the opportunity of parading their charms before one large building full of Americans.

To end this discursive view and get down to the charges, let us take the testimony of Lieut. Stephen T. Early of the 117th Infantry, now associated with the Stars and Stripes in Paris.
In civilian life Lieut. Early was with the Washington staff of the Associated Press, so we may regard him as careful and reliable in his statements and conclusions.

In Battle Zone.

"My regiment was in the Argonne fighting," he told me. "One day my platoon was in the support line. Just a little back of the main engagement, and right alongside us there was a Y man with a stock of chocolate and cigarettes, which he was giving away free to the soldiers. To my knowledge he worked steadily for twenty-four hours without a stop. He did all that anybody could possibly have done."

I talked with a fine, capable and sensible Y. M. C. A. secretary who has spent eighteen months in France, and who knows the situation thoroughly.

"It is true," he told me, "that some of the Y workers should never have come to France at all. Out of a personnel of 6,500 men, headquarters has been obliged to give dishonorable discharges to 200, and send them home.

These men were of the type who had never experienced temptation, and who couldn't measure up to the situation. Some of them went wrong morally. You have heard how three workers have been locked up for embezzling money entrusted to them by doughboys about to go over the top.
We have had too many ministers without executive ability. Some ministers have gone down before the lure of the girls on the Paris boulevards.
Then we have had some men who used the Y as a means of getting to France to see the war, and whose interest flagged as soon as they had been around a little. We have had small men and big heads, who lacked the boys. But take all these misfits together, and they have made only a small percentage of the whole. The best of the Y workers are sincere, whole-hearted men who have made real sacrifices, and whose families have undergone sacrifices, in order that they might come to France.

To Extortionate Prices.

"Charges of extortionate prices are not fair. At the outset, when the army directed the Y. M. C. A. to create the exchange, we charged prices that would cover cost of goods and transportation, and a margin for waste and spoilage. This caused protest. For some time the Y. M. C. A. charged commissary prices and stood a loss for the rest."

"On one occasion I obtained a supply of smoking tobacco which I sold at three cents a sack. The rumor spread that I charged a franc a sack, and I couldn't head it off."

"We have given away free to the soldiers more supplies than all the rest of the relief organizations put together, with the exception of the Red Cross."

"The Y. M. C. A. stands well with the high officers of the army. Our most meritorious critics are the leu-tenants. As for the doughboys, they do not have an easy time of it over here in the mud, with their pay often far in arrears, and with the mills from home slow and irregular. The men have their personal troubles; many a man has come to me for comfort when his girl back home has married someone else. The doughboys are perfectly free to take out their rough on the Y. M. C. A., and they do it.
The Y offers them a safety valve. It seems discouraging at times to work your head off and get nothing but groans and sneers and looks of aversion, but I am confident that judgments will be more mellow in time."

What W. A. White Says.

I asked William Allen White what he thought of the work of the Y. M.
C. A. "It has done as well as the army," was his comment. "The Y. M.
C. A. has been of incalculable service to our men abroad, in spite of all mistakes. The cheerful reading and lounging rooms all over France, the $2,000,000 worth of athletic equipment, the equal amount invested in books, the ten million sheets of letter

His Love Story

And just then Madame d'Esclagnac rolled up between them and with an unmistakable satisfaction presented to her niece the gentleman she had secured.

"My dear Julia, my godson, the Duc de Tremont." And Sabron bowed to both the ladies, to the duke, and went away.

This was the picture he might add to his collection: the older woman in her vivid dress, Julia in her simpler gown, and the titled Frenchman bowing over her hand.

When he went out to the front terrace Brunet was there with his horse, and Pitcheune was there as well, still waiting at attention.

"Brunet," said the officer to his man, "will you take Pitcheune around to the servants' quarters and give him to Miss Redmond's maid? I am going to leave him here."

"Good, mon Capitaine," said the ordonnance, and whistled to the dog. Pitcheune sprang toward his master with a short sharp bark. What he understood would be hard to say, but all that he wanted to do was to remain with Sabron. Sabron bent down and stroked him.

"Go, my friend, with Brunet. Go, mon vieux, go," he commanded sternly, and the little dog, trained to obedience as a soldier's dog should be, trotted reluctantly at the heels of the ordonnance, and the soldier threw his leg over the saddle and rode away. He rode regardless of anything but the fact that he was going.

CHAPTER VIII.

Homesick.

Pitcheune was a soldier's dog, born in a stable, of a mother who had been dear to the canteen. Michette had been one of the vivandieres, a real daughter of the regiment.

Pitcheune was a worthy son. He adored the drums and trumpets. He adored the life. He adored the drills which he was accustomed to watch from a respectable distance. He liked Brunet, and the word had not yet been discovered which would express how he felt toward Monsieur le Capitaine, his master. His muscular little form expressed it in every fiber. His brown eyes looked at them with paths might have melted a heart of iron.

There was nothing picturesque to Pitcheune in the Chateau d'Esclagnac or in the charming room to which he was brought. The little dog took a flying tour around it, over sofas and chairs, landing on the window-seat, where he crouched. He was not wicked, but he was perfectly miserable, and the lovely wiles of Julia Redmond and her endearments left him unmoved. He refused meat and drink, was indifferent to the views from the window, to the beautiful view of King Rene's castle, to the tantalizing cat sunning herself against the wall. He knew about the man, leaving destruction in his wake, tugged at the leash when they took him out for exercise, in short, Pitcheune was a homesick, lovesick little dog, and thereby endeared himself more than ever to his new mistress. She tied a ribbon around his neck, which he promptly chewed off. She tried to feed him with her own fair hands; he held his head high, looked bored and grew thin in the flanks.

"I think Captain de Sabron's little dog is going to die, ma tante," she told her aunt.

Ruddy Cheeks—Sparkling Eyes—Most Women Can Have

Says Dr. Edwards, a Well-Known Ohio Physician

Dr. F. M. Edwards for 17 years treated scores of women for liver and bowel ailments. During these years he gave his patients a prescription made of a few well-known vegetable ingredients mixed with olive oil, naming them Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. You will know them by their olive color. These tablets are wonder-workers on the liver and bowels, which cause a normal action, carrying off the waste and poisonous matter in one's system. If you have a pale face, sallow look, dull eyes, pimples, coated tongue, headache, a listless, no-good feeling, all out of sorts, inactive bowels, you take one of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets nightly for a time and note the pleasing results. Thousands of women as well as men take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the successful substitute for calomel—now and then just to keep in the pink of condition. 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

PETHEY DINK—PETHEY HADN'T NOTICED MUCH CHANGE IN THE DRESSES.

"Fiddlesticks, my dear Julia! Keep him tied up until he is accustomed to the place. It won't hurt him to fast; he will eat when he is hungry. I have a note from Robert. He has gone to Monte Carlo."

"Ah!" breathed Miss Redmond differently. She slowly went over to her piano and played a few measures of music that were a torture to Pitcheune, who found these ladylike performances in strong contrast to drums and trumpets. He felt himself as a soldier degraded and could not understand why he should be relegated to a salon and to the mild society of two ladies who did not even know how to pull his ears or roll him over on the rug with their riding boots and spurs. He sat against the window as was his habit, looking watching, yearning.

"Vous avez tort, ma chere," said her aunt, who was working something less than a thousand flowers on her tapestry. "The chance to be a princess and a Tremont does not come twice in a young girl's life, and you know you have only to be reasonable, Julia." Miss Redmond's fingers wandered, magnetically drawn by her thoughts, into a song which she played softly through. Pitcheune heard and turned his beautiful head and his soft eyes to her. He knew that tune. Neither drums nor trumpets had played it, but there was no doubt about its being fit for soldiers. He had heard his master sing it, hum it, many times. It had soothed his nerves when he was a sick puppy and it went with many things of the intimate life with his master. He remembered it when he had dozed by the fire and dreamed of chasing cats and barking at Brunet and being a faithful dog all around; he heard again a beloved voice hum it to him. Pitcheune whined and softly jumped down from his seat. He put his forepaws on Miss Redmond's lap. She stopped and caressed him, and he licked her hand.

"That is the first time I have seen that dog show a spark of human gratitude, Julia. He is probably begging you to open the door and let him take a run."

Indeed Pitcheune did go to the door and waited appealingly.

"I think you might trust him out. I think he is tamed," said the Marquise d'Esclagnac. "He is a real little savage."

Miss Redmond opened the door and Pitcheune shot out. She watched him tear like mad across the terrace, and scuttled into the woods, as she thought, after a rabbit. He was the color of the fallen leaves and she lost sight of him in the brown and golden brush.

CHAPTER IX.

The Fortunes of War.

Sabron's departure had been delayed on account of a strike at the dockyards of Marseilles. He left Tarascon one lovely day toward the end of January and the old town with its sweetness and its sorrow, fell behind, as he rolled away to brighter suns. A friend from Paris took him to the port in his motor and there Sabron waited some forty-eight hours before he set sail. His boat lay out on the azure water, the brown rocks of the coast behind it. There was not a breeze to stir as he took the tug which was to convey him. He was inclined to dip his fingers in the indigo ocean, sure that he would find them blue. He climbed up the ladder alongside of the vessel, was welcomed by the captain, who knew him, and turned to go below, for he had been suffering from an attack of fever which now and then laid hold of him, ever since his campaign in Morocco.

Therefore, as he went into his cabin, which he did not leave until the steamer touched Algiers, he failed to see the baggage tender pull up and failed to see a sailor climb to the deck with a wet bedraggled thing in his hand that looked like an old fur cap except that it wriggled and was alive.

"This, mon commandant," said the sailor to the captain, "is the pluckiest little beast I ever saw."

He dropped a small terrier on the deck, who proceeded to shake himself vigorously and bark with apparent delight.

"No sooner had we pushed out from the quay than this little beggar sprang from the pier and began to swim after us. He was so funny that we let him swim for a bit and then we hauled him in. It is evidently a mascot, mon commandant, evidently a sailor dog who has run away to sea."

The captain looked with interest at Pitcheune, who engaged himself in making his toilet and biting after a flea or two which had not been drowned.

"We sailors," said the man saluting, "would like to keep him for luck, mon commandant."

"Take him down then," his superior officer ordered, "and don't let him up among the passengers."

It was a rough voyage. Sabron passed his time saying good-by to France and trying to keep his mind away from the Chateau d'Esclagnac, which persisted in haunting his uneasy slumber. In a blaze of sunlight, Algiers, the white city, shone upon them on the morning of the third day and Sabron tried to take a more cheerful view of a soldier's life and fortunes.

He was a soldierly figure and a handsome one as he walked down the gangplank to the shore to be welcomed by fellow officers who were eager to see him, and presently was lost in the little crowd that streamed away from the docks into the white city.

CHAPTER X.

Together Again.

That night after dinner and a cigarette, he strode into the streets to distract his mind with the sight of the oriental city and to fill his ears with the eager cries of the crowd. The lamps flickered. The sky overhead was as blue nearly as in daytime. He walked, leisurely toward the native quarter, jostled, as he passed, by men in their brilliant costumes and by a veiled woman or two.

He stopped indifferently before a little cafe, his eyes on a Turkish bazaar where velvets and scarves were being sold at double their worth under the light of a flaming yellow lamp. As he stood so, his back to the cafe where a number of the ship's crew were drinking, he heard a short sharp sound that had a sweet familiarity about it and whose individuality made him start with surprise. He could not believe his ears. He heard the bark again and then he was sprung upon by a little body that ran out from between the legs of a sailor who sat drinking his coffee and liquor.

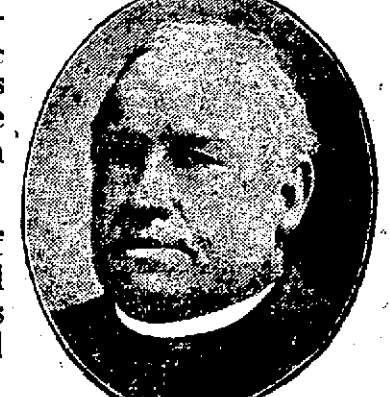

"Gracious heavens!" exclaimed Sabron, thinking that he must be the victim of a hashish dream. "Pitcheune!"

YOU CAN'T BE TOO CAREFUL AFTER GRIP OR A HEAVY COLD

Weakened Victims of Epidemic Need Strength-Building Food Such as Father John's Medicine In Struggle to Regain Health.

The Great Food Value of This Old-Fashioned Prescription Proves Its Worth As Tonic For All The Family.

Following the grip epidemic which swept the country comes a period of great danger to those who have suffered from the disease even in its milder forms, who find themselves unable to regain normal strength and health. This weakness which seems to make recovery so hard and long-delayed is a period of special danger because the resisting power of the system is lowered and the patient has little strength to fight off colds, coughs and other more serious ailments. During this time of danger the safe tonic for all the family is Father John's Medicine. This old-fashioned pure and wholesome food-medicine contains strength-building, health-giving elements which are easily taken up by the weakened system and quickly made into new strength and health. Doctors agree that the epidemic will not be wholly conquered until the warm weather of the summer has come, and it is a measure of safety for everyone to keep fortified to resist the lurking grip germs. As the first sign of a cold begin taking Father John's Medicine. It gives strength with which to fight off colds, grip and more serious illness. If you have a cold, remember that to neglect it is to invite grip or pneumonia. Remember that Father John's Medicine is guaranteed free from alcohol or dangerous drugs in any form and for that reason it is a safe body-building food for all the family.

Advantages of Egotism. It is to be said in favor of self-assertion that people may not take you at your estimate of yourself, but they will be sure to accept any underestimation that you may make.

FEEL MISERABLE FROM THAT COLD?

Colds and coughs are quickly relieved by Dr. King's New Discovery

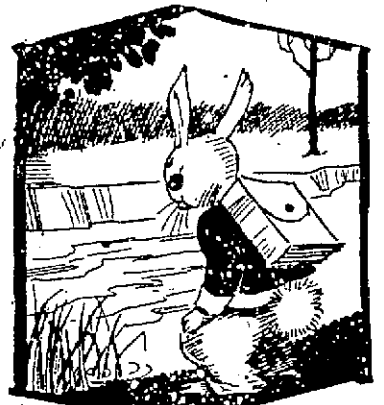

Nobody should feel "perfectly miserable" from a cold, cough or bronchial attack for very long. For it takes only a little while to relieve it and get back on the road to recovery when Dr. King's New Discovery is faithfully used. It soon loosens the phlegm, relieves irritation, soothes the parched, sore throat, brings comfort. Half a century old and more popular today than ever. 60c and $1.20.

Make Your Bowels Behave Make them function with gratifying precision. If regulation of the diet does not relieve their torpidity Dr. King's New Life Pills will. They are perfect bowel trainers, cleanse the system surely, comfortably. 25c.

Tales of the Friendly Forest

You remember in the last story Billy Bunny found Prof. Crow's little black book and gave it back to him. And was that old bird delighted? Well, I just guess he was, and he kept on thanking the little rabbit until Billy thought he'd never stop. So at last he said: "Won't you read something out of your book, professor?" And then that wise old bird put on his spectacles and turned to page 23 and commenced:

"He who fights and hopes away Will live to hop another day. And then the old crow shut his book with a snap and flew away. But before he went he gave Billy Bunny a cough drop.

So the little rabbit got out his knapsack and threw it over his shoulder, and picked up his striped candy cane and started out over the Pleasant Meadow, and by and by he came to the Babbling Brook where his friend, the little Fresh Water Crab, lived.

"Hello, there, Billy Bunny," he said, for he was so busy eating water cross that he didn't want to stop. "Come on, I'll race you down to the Old Mill Pond," said Billy Bunny. "Wait till I have finished this water-cress."

"No, I won't," replied the little rabbit. "Come now or never." So the little Fresh Water Crab started down the Babbling Brook as fast he could swim, and the little rabbit hopped along the edge of the bank as fast as he could, and the Babbling Brook pushed the little crab along and Willie Wind helped the little rabbit all he could by blowing against his powder puff tail. But who would have won I can't tell, for all of a sudden the big claw of the little crab caught fast in a net which the Miller's Boy had spread across the stream. And still the little rabbit kept on hopping, for he didn't know what had happened, you see, and pretty soon he came to the Old Mill Pond, where Uncle Bullfrog sat on his log all day long and swallowed the flies in a solemn way and patted his waistcoat up and down and blinked his eyes like a circus clown. And then Billy Bunny looked around for his little crab friend. "Why, where is he?" said the little rabbit, and he looked up the Babbling Brook and then he saw what had happened, and in the next story you shall hear how the little crab got out of the net.

Proprietor of Auction Sale Well Pleased With Results

If you are going to hold an auction this spring read what W. C. Ford has to say about Gazette advertising and perhaps you can apply the same thing to your auction successfully.

Gazette Printing Co., Gentlemen:—

I thought you might be interested in hearing what I did at my auction held on January 22nd and which was advertised in your paper.

The day of the sale was a very bad day. The weather was fierce, but I had a large crowd and secured high prices for everything. I think that the reason that I had such a large crowd was due to the fact that people saw my ads and naturally because they wanted what I had to sell came out on a bad day. Col. Dooley certainly is "some auctioneer" and he talked things up in great shape for me. I think it pays better to advertise in The Gazette than to do billing. (Signed) W. C. FORD.

Gazette Advertising Surely Gets Results for Auction Proprietors

Mr. Ford's letter is but one of many that have come in to the Gazette office. It has been proven hundreds of times in the past few years that The Gazette is the only and logical medium in which to advertise auctions because its immense number of farm readers look to The Gazette for their information regarding auctions, where and when the sales are to be held and the list of what will be put up for sale at each auction.
